

Chapter 8.1

Joints, also called articulations (jointed), are connections between bones. They have many functions that include providing stability by binding parts of the skeletal system, making possible bone growth, permitting parts of the skeleton to change shape during childbirth, & enabling the body to move in response to skeletal muscle contraction. The number of joints changes in the human body from birth until old age. However, typically there are about 230 joints in the average adult:

- joints are classified according to the degree of movement possible
 - immovable (synarthrotic)
 - slightly movable (amphiarthrotic)
 - freely movable (diarthrotic)

Fibrous joints are so named bc the dense conn. tissue holding them together has many collagen fibers

- syndesmoses
- sutures
- gomphoses

Syndesmosis are the bones bound by a sheet (interosseous membrane) / bundle of dense conn. tissue (interosseous ligament)

- somewhat flexible / slight movement
- ex: between tibia & fibula at distal ends & between shafts

- sutures are only found between flat bones of the skull
- as babies grow, sutures replace fontanelles
