

Worksheet: Biology Natural Selection and Evolution Study Guide

1. Define and give an example of each:

homologous structure: similar physical features in organisms that share a common ancestor, but the features serve completely different functions analogous structure: features of different species that are similar in function but not necessarily in structure and which do not derive from a common ancestral feature

vestigial structure: a biological structure that has lost a major ancestral function and is usually drastically reduced in size

2. What observations did Charles Darwin make about finches on the Galápagos Islands? each finch species had a different type of beak, depending on the food available on its island

3. What were each scientist below famous for doing?

- Carolus Linnaeus: he decided man was an animal like any other, and put Homo sapiens in the animal kingdom, alongside other animals
- Charles Darwin: discovery theory of natural selection, the origin and adaptations of organisms were brought into the realm of science
- Jean-Baptiste Lamarck: believed that living things evolved in a continuously upward direction, from dead matter, through simple to more complex forms, toward human "perfection"
- James Hutton: developed the concept of uniformitarianism, he believed Earth's landscapes like mountains and oceans formed over long period of time through gradual processes

4. What is the difference between artificial selection and natural selection?

Natural selection is any selection process that occurs as a result of an organism's ability to adapt to its surroundings.

Artificial selection, on the other hand, is selective breeding that is imposed by an external entity, usually humans, in order to enhance the frequency of desirable features.
