0580 32 M J 2014 Model Answer:

NK Cell-Based Cancer Immunotherapy Francisco Borrego, Susana Larrucea, Rafael Solana, Raquel Tarazona, 2016-09-08
Natural killer NK cells are innate lymphoid cells that have a significant role in regulating the defenses against cancer development and certain viral infections. They are equipped with an array of activating and inhibitory receptors that stimulate or diminish NK cell activity respectively. Inhibitory receptors include among others the MHC class I ligands killer cell immunoglobulin like receptors KIR in humans and members of the Ly49 family of receptors in mice and CD94 NKG2A. Activating receptors include cytokine and chemokine receptors and those that interact with ligands expressed on target cells such as the natural cytotoxicity receptors or NCRs NKp30 NKp44 and NKp46 NKG2D CD244 and DNAM 1. In addition NK cells express Fc RIIIA or CD16 the receptor that exerts antibody dependent cell mediated cytotoxicity ADCC. NK cells also express the death ligands FasL and TRAIL. The killing or sparing of target cells depends on the integration of distinct signals that originate from NK cell receptors. NK cells spare healthy cells that express normal levels of MHC class I molecules and low amounts of stress induced self molecules whereas they kill target cells that down regulate MHC class I molecules and or up regulate stress induced self molecules. The latter are common signatures of virus infected cells and tumors. All the accumulated knowledge on NK cell biology along with many clinical observations is driving multiple efforts to improve the arsenal of NK cell based therapeutic tools in the fight against malignant diseases. Indeed NK cell based immunotherapy is becoming a promising approach for the treatment of many cancers. It is well known that NK cells have a significant role in the anti tumor effect of therapeutic antibodies that use ADCC as a mechanism of action. In addition to this administration of autologous and allogeneic NK cells after activation and expansion ex vivo is used in the treatment of cancer. Moreover adoptive transfer of NK cell lines has been tested in humans and genetically modified NK cells expressing chimeric antigen receptors are being studied in preclinical models for potential use in the clinic.

The Janus-Face of Language: Where Are the Emotions in Words and the Words in Emotions? Cornelia Herbert, Thomas Ethofer, Andreas J. Fallgatter, Peter Walla, Georg Northoff, 2018-09-28
Language has long been considered independent from emotions. In the last few years however research has accumulated empirical evidence against this theoretical belief of a purely cognitive based foundation of language. In particular through research on emotional word processing it has been shown that processing of emotional words activates emotional brain structures elicits emotional facial expressions and modulates action tendencies of approach and avoidance probably in a similar manner as processing of non verbal emotional stimuli does. In addition it has been shown that emotional content is already processed in the visual cortex in a facilitated manner which suggests that processing of emotional language content is able to circumvent in depth semantic analysis. Yet this is only one side of the coin. Very recent research putting words into context suggests that language may also construe emotions and that by studying word processing one can provide a window to one's own feelings. All in all the empirical observations support the thesis of a close relationship between language and emotions at the level of word meaning as a specific evolutionary achievement of the human species As such this relationship seems to be different from the one between emotions and speech where emotional meaning is conveyed by nonverbal features of the voice But what does this relationship between written words and emotions theoretically imply for the processing of emotional information The present Research Topic and its related articles aim to provide answers to this question This book comprises several experimental studies investigating the brain structures and the time course of emotional word processing Included are studies examining the affective core dimensions underlying affective word processing and studies that show how these basic affective dimensions influence word processing in general as well as the interaction between words feelings and expressive behavior In addition new impetus comes from studies that on the one hand investigate how task sublexical and intrapersonal factors influence emotional word processing and on the other hand extend emotional word processing to the domains of social context and self related processing Finally future perspectives are outlined including research on emotion and language acquisition culture and multilingualism In summary this textbook offers scientists from different disciplines insight into the neurophysiological behavioral and subjective mechanisms underlying emotion and language interactions It gives new impulses to existing theories on the embodiment of language and emotion and provides new ways of looking at emotion cognition interactions
