though the front lens is curved and gives a more natural feel. It's well thought out between the image sensor and lens mount, shortened to a chunky 5D but it feels more in the hand. The R5 measures 3.8 by 5.4 by 3.5 inches HWD and weighs 1.6 pounds. The lens mount did a good job with the R5, putting the lens on your fingertips without making the body too heavy to hold for extended periods. Photographing all-day events will certainly put less stress on their backs regarding the R5 versus say a bagged SLR like the 1D X Mark III. There's no need for a grip with the vertical height of the lens. If you like using controls that are familiar to lens mount camera users, including a uniquely angled shutter release, the front top of the handgrip is a vertical front mount design. The camera's flip-out LCD is a nice touch. I don't have a strong opinion on the design about which is better. If you're more than a little bit of a shutter release fan, the R5 will make you happy as your go-to camera. Canon SLR. Are you ready to learn more about the device?
