

A near miss is a safety event that nearly results in an employee injury but does not. Examples of near misses include slipping on a wet floor and falling, but not sustaining an injury, or a container falling off overhead pallet racking that does not strike anyone. A mature and robust safety system will track and respond to near misses as a leading indicator rather than only react to actual injuries. Improvements in employee safety can also be sustained by paying particular attention to the potential severity of the near miss—that is, to focus as top priority those near misses that could have resulted in life-threatening injuries.
