

Chapter 3 Psychometrics: Reliability & Validity

The purpose of classroom assessment in a physical, virtual, or blended classroom is to measure (i.e., scale and classify) examinees' knowledge, skills, and/or attitudes. For example in achievement testing, one measures, using points, how much knowledge a learner possesses (called scaling) and then his or her total raw point score equates to a grade, e.g., "A," "B," "C," etc. (called classifying).

In this chapter, we will consider essential attributes of any measuring device: reliability and validity. Classical reliability indices (i.e., test-retest [stability], parallel forms [equivalence], internal consistency, and inter-rater) are most routinely used in classroom assessment and are hence, discussed. Item Response Theory (IRT) and other advanced techniques for determining reliability are more frequently used with high-stakes and standardized testing; we don't examine those. Four types of validity are explored (i.e., content, criterion-related [predictive or concurrent], and construct). Content validity is most important in classroom assessment. The test or quiz should be appropriately reliable and valid. The test or quiz should be appropriately reliable and valid.

I. Classical Reliability Indices

A. Introduction

1. Reliability is an indicator of consistency, i.e., an indicator of how stable a test score or data is across applications or time. A measure should produce similar or the same results consistently if it measures the same "thing." A measure can be reliable without being valid. A measure cannot be valid without being reliable. The book, Standards for Educational and Psychological Testing (2014), provides guidance for all phases of test development.
2. The Four Types of Reliability
  - a. Test-Retest reliability (also called Stability) answers the question, "Will the scores be stable over time." A test or measure is administered. Some time later the same test or measure is re-administered to the same or highly similar group. One would expect that the reliability coefficient will be highly correlated. For example, a classroom achievement test is administered. The test is given two weeks later with a reliability coefficient of  $r = 0.70$ , giving evidence of consistency (i.e., stability).
  - b. Parallel forms reliability (also called Equivalence) answers the question, "Are the two forms of the test or measure equivalent?" If different forms of the same test or measure are administered to the same group; one would expect that the reliability coefficient will be high. For example, Form A and Form B of a test of customer service knowledge or reading achievement are administered. The scores correlate at  $r = 0.77$ , giving evidence of equivalency.
  - c. Internal consistency reliability answers the question, "How well does each item measure the content or construct under consideration?" It is an indicator of reliability for a test or measure which is administered once.
